The Karera waterfalls immerse deep into the forest with very gigantic trees and that are stunning to watch as they flow via different paths in six branches and three different levels.

There are many sources of the Nile but this mountain stream in Burundi is likely the southernmost source of the river, which cuts a winding course through several countries before it empties into the Mediterranean. The pyramid of the source of the Nile was built as a symbol of the beginning of this river whose source was nevertheless difficult to find after several failures of some explorers.

Gitega is the political capital and second-largest city of Burundi. Gishora Drum Sanctuary, a site dedicated to Burundi's drumming heritage, which is recognized by UNESCO as an Intangible Cultural Heritage. The valley bottoms contain a dense ground cover of herbs, vines, and shrubs with only a few trees hence its name, the impenetrable forest. This is one of the richest faunal communities in East Africa.

The tracking / trekking (up to six hours or longer is not uncommon) can entail climbing as well as hiking; although when you come face to face with the tranquil yet potent Mountain Gorillas, observing the baby with the mothers, the gorillas partaking their everyday routine just right in front of you is all very overwhelming.

Chimpanzee trekking in Kibale National Park is one of Uganda's most thrilling wildlife experiences, offering visitors the chance to observe our closest living relatives in their natural rainforest habitat. The trek begins early in the morning with a briefing at the park's visitor center. Groups of trekkers, limited to minimize impact on the environment and the chimpanzees, then set off into the lush rainforest.

Once the chimpanzees are located, visitors are allowed to spend up to an hour observing them as they go about their daily routines—feeding, grooming, playing, and socializing.
